The International Relations Program organizes lecture on Democracy in the Americas

The International Relations Program organized the online conference “La democracia en las Américas”. The lecture was presented by constitutional law expert Carlos Sánchez Berzaín, who provided his assessment on the rights and freedoms of individuals and their institutions.

The conference aimed to foster a reflective and critical analysis of the state of democracies in the Americas in light of the civil, social, cultural, and political rights and liberties of their citizens, as well as the state of their institutions. This session on the democratic state of the Americas took place virtually on May 5.

Panel Discussion on Political Reform

Omar Awapara, director of the Political Science program, was invited to the virtual conference “La reforma política pendiente” (The Pending Political Reform), organized by Congresswoman Adriana Tudela.

The conference delved into the pending political reform, which includes proposals such as voluntary voting, uninominal districts, parliamentary reelection, and bicameralism. The panel also featured Jaime de Althaus, Carlos Meléndez, and José Luis Sardón.

Municipal Debate

The Political Science program organized a panel discussion to present the government plans of the candidates for mayor of Chorrillos and promote debate among them.

The event was moderated by Omar Awapara, the program director. The debate took place on September 24, 2022, at Campus Villa and was livestreamed on YouTube from the UPC TV account.

Training for Journalists: Journalistic Coverage in Electoral Processes

The Communications and Journalism program conducted three workshops on journalistic coverage in electoral processes, with the participation of journalists from the localities of Cañete, Chincha, and Ayacucho (PERÚ LNG). These workshops were led by Professor Martín Higuera.

The workshops were held to provide current tools to journalists in order to generate good journalistic practices for informative, efficient, and ethical management within the context of an electoral campaign.

Code of Ethics

From March to June 2022, this activity was conducted in a virtual format by students of the last terms of the Business School of UPC, for the benefit of an organization with social or environmental impact operating in any part of the country.

In this academic work, students approached a previously registered organization with the aim of providing counseling and support in the development of their code of ethics. This endeavor allowed our students to engage with a real organization and empathize with a social issue.

Development of the Corporate Code of Ethics for Two Companies Evea Eco Fashion and 2p La Barra

Students from the School of Business carried out the project of developing a Corporate Code of Ethics for the companies Evea Eco Fashion and 2p La Barra. Evea Eco Fashion is a company dedicated to the responsible and sustainable production of soles and footwear from eco-friendly materials, contributing to the conservation of forest care and the development of native communities within the Amazon rainforest.

2p La Barra is an affordable food business. The purpose of the project was to ensure that employees act in accordance with the values that represent the company to establish a better relationship with their customers and stakeholders.

Political and Social Situation in Peru

In April 2022, the Political Science program organized a virtual panel discussion to analyze the political situation in the country one year after the elections.

The discussion was led by two expert panelists, Omar Awapara and Mauricio Cuadra, who addressed the current political and social situation of the country to an audience of 100 participants.

A Comprehensive Look at Pension System Reform

The Political Science program organized the panel discussion “A Comprehensive Look at Pension System Reform” with the aim of understanding and informing about the future of the pension system.

The academic panel discussed the opportunities and threats regarding the pension system.

The event took place in the Luis Bustamante auditorium at campus San Isidro, with an attendance of 75 people.

Organization of American States: Realities and Challenges

The International Relations program at UPC hosted the panel discussion “Organización de Estados Americanos: Realidades y Retos.” This event aimed to contribute to the academic development of the program’s students and other UPC students.

Through thematic lectures delivered by specialists, reflective analyses were conducted on the role of the Organization of American States in view of the upcoming General Assembly in Lima.

The speaker was Dr. Luis Gonzales Posada, a lawyer and journalist, former Minister of Justice, and Ambassador of Peru to the OAS.
